The present invention relates to the extraction of mineral ores and more particularly to an apparatus for the pressure swing leaching of the mineral ores. In pressure swing leaching, water is contacted with the ore such as a limestone to remove the valuable minerals therefrom. The ore is then subjected to hot air to drive off volatile components from the leached ore. The volatile components are then separated, and the resulting tailings are further processed to recover the minerals which they contained. The most common pressure swing leach technique is the single-pass pressure swing leaching process. Pressure swing leaching techniques other than single-pass pressure leaching involve multiple leaching passes of the ore. For example, in a double-pass pressure swing leaching technique, the ore is contacted with a fresh leach solution in the first leaching pass of the ore. The ore is then heated to produce volatile leach by-products in the second leaching pass. Pressure swing leaching techniques are well known in the industry. Such techniques are described in U.S. Pat. No. 3,573,834, issued Mar. 30, 1971 to J. F. Gerneisen et al.; U.S. Pat. No. 3,805,080, issued Apr. 23, 1974 to R. J. Bunting; and U.S. Pat. No. 4,170,515, issued Oct. 9, 1979 to R. G. Willick. Single-pass pressure swing leaching techniques commonly operate at a pressure ranging from about 5 to about 15 psig (34.56 to 169.36 kPa) and a temperature ranging from about 40.degree. F. to about 150.degree. F. (4.44.degree. C. to 66.06.degree. C.), with a time for contact with the ore ranging from about 10 to about 60 minutes. Double-pass pressure swing leaching techniques commonly operate at a pressure of about 1 to about 15 psig (6.89 to 97.36 kPa) and a temperature of about 150.degree. F. to about 300.degree. F. (65.56.degree. C. to 149.16.degree. C.), with each pass of the ore taking from about 20 to about 60 minutes, and with a regeneration atmosphere between the passes at about 1 to about 15 psig (6.89 to 97.36 kPa). Pressure swing leaching is not an efficient process because

Q: Shell script to block users I'm using a macbook pro (i7 processor) and I was wondering if there is a way to setup a shell script to block certain users from accessing certain folder, or even all users from accessing all folders. In other words, I want it to have a "No Networking" mode if a certain user is logged in, and I do not want that user to access any folder. Thanks in advance, A: Try this: $ sudo chown -R root:root /home/user/ $ sudo chown -R user /home/user/ The second one only chowns the home directory. A: Have a look at iptables. You can create a firewall using iptables, and add custom rules that will allow you to do exactly what you want, or modify rules that already exist to accomplish that. A glass tube is one of the most important tools in a welder's tool kit, as it enables the welder to hold his torch in a confined space. Typically, several glass tubes are held together by a band and the band is secured to the tubes by a retainer ring. The combination of a band and a retainer ring is usually referred to as a "cylindrical glass tube set." Typically, the band is somewhat resilient and can be used to hold the glass tubes in place, as well as to protect the tubes from damage. By resilient, it is meant that the band returns to its initial position when force is removed. Accordingly, in instances in which a tube is inadvertently removed from a retainer ring, the band maintains a tight grip on the glass tube. A glass tube set typically comprises a cylindrical ring of glass which encircles the glass tube. The cylindrical ring of glass is preferably coated or lined with a silicone-based material, which protects the glass ring from thermal shock during bending or heat-relieving processes. The ring is usually covered with a band of thermoplastic rubber or a polymer plastic. The band not only protects the ring of glass from the welder's torch, but also provides added strength to the band and retention of the glass tubes. The bands are often adhered to the glass tube set by spray adhesives or adhesives which are mixed by extrusion. The band is usually coated with a composition of polysulfide polymer, a
